

5/12/99

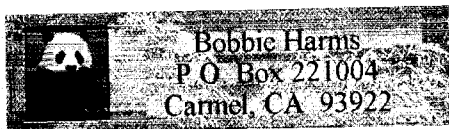

Dear Dr. Sundlof:

I've been reading of late about the use of antibiotics to promote growth in farm animals, and am most disturbed about the long-term consequences of this practice. There appears to be mounting evidence that bacteria in animals becomes resistant to antibiotics they're given, and that these bacteria can infect humans through the meat, milk, or eggs that we eat. And there's no treatment for people infected with antibiotic-resistant bacteria. The European Union and Sweden have banned antibiotics used in human illness. Our country should call a complete halt to this dangerous practice--I urge you to do all you can to bring this about. Thank you.

Bobbie Harms
(Ms. Bobbie Harms)

99P-0485

C398

The Lyceum, University of Mississippi, Oxford

Dr. Stephen Sundlof
FDA Center for Veterinary Medicine
7500 Standish Place
Rockville, MD 20855

97% recycled

